News from the IUPUI Solution Center

Building university-community partnerships in Central Indiana.

Greetings!

Recently, Indiana University and IUPUI rolled out a new branding initiative and tagline - "What matters. Where it matters." - which got us thinking about what matters in the IUPUI Solution Center's work. The answer is simple: strong community partnerships. University-community partnerships are a driving force of experiential learning at IUPUI and would not be possible without the support of community organizations, faculty members, and students like you. So for that, we thank you!

University-community relationships are critical to student learning, faculty research, innovation, and discovery, AND community partnerships that strengthen our communities and encourage our graduates to stay and succeed in Indiana. The IUPUI Solution Center is proud to serve its campus and its community. Our partners are: What Matters. Where it Matters.

Sincerely,

Teresa Bennett
Director, IUPUI Solution Center

IUPUI students help establish tribal museum in Alaska

As part of a newly created field experience, several IUPUI museum studies and anthropology

students spent part of their summer vacations traveling outside Indiana. The three-week field study in Alaska, was created by Holly Cusack-McVeigh, Assistant Professor in Anthropology, and was made possible through funding and support from the University of Alaska, private and public museums in Alaska, and the IUPUI Community Venture Fund.

The IUPUI Solution Center granted nearly $15,000 to cover student stipends and travel expenses for 10 students who traveled to the village of Nanwalek, Alaska, where they helped residents identify, preserve, and display their cultural artifacts at a newly established local museum.

Nanwalek is a census-designated place with an area of 8.5 square miles on the southern tip of the Kenai Peninsula in southern Alaska. Read more.

IUPUI museum studies and anthropology students worked to help Nanwalek villagers identify, clean, and display cultural artifacts at their local museum.

IUPUI Solution Center Community Partners to Appear on Indy Local TV

For just 30 minutes on Tues., Sept 3, every local television station in Indianapolis will cut off from regular program commercials to urge the entire community to "LIVE UNITED." The segment will profile the good work of several IUPUI Solution Center partners in order to illustrate the immense impact such as assignments, grading criteria and class schedules.

Coleman and Hardin say their new system offers greater user-friendliness for faculty members uploading class resources. The project was part of an Informatics - Media Arts and Science course.

United Way and their affiliates made on the city of Indianapolis. Stories include the Martin Center Sickle Cell Initiative's persistence in alleviating the emotional barriers of a 5-year-old dealing with Sickle Cell and John H. Boner Community Center's dedication to life-changing crisis aversion techniques for a young woman in need. For more information, visit UWCI.

Goodbye to Solution Center staff member, Andrea Zeek!

We are saying goodbye to Andrea Zeek, who has been the IUPUI Solution Center's communication assistant since September 2012. Andrea wrote stories for our monthly newsletters, managed social media accounts, helped plan events, and coordinated other internal and external communication efforts for the Solution Center.

Andrea will be starting graduate school this fall at the Indiana University School of Journalism in Bloomington, Ind. This is a great opportunity for her, and we wish her the best in her future endeavors. Thank you, Andrea!
