The IU School of Law-Indianapolis Chinese Law Summer Program has entered into a collaboration agreement with the China Summer Program at Boston College Law School. Students in Boston College's China Summer Program will participate in the summer study abroad program that the IU-Indianapolis law school operates at Renmin University of China Law School in Beijing. The IU program has operated a summer program in China since 1987 and has conducted classes at Renmin University since 1998. The relationship between IU and Renmin is the longest-running international relationship for both schools. In 2010, the Ministry of Education in China identified Renmin University of China School of Law as the top ranked law school in that nation. The IU China Summer Program is directed by Professor Lloyd T. Wilson, Jr., and the Boston China Program is directed by Professor Judith McMorrow. Both professors began planning the collaboration when they met at a conference at Renmin University last October and look forward to a long relationship between their programs.

IU School of Law-Indianapolis law students put their education to use even before graduation with the recently founded Indiana University Student Outreach Clinic Legal Services (IU-SOC). Beginning in the fall of 2010, law students Todd Hassee, Kim Opsahl, Laramie Paras, Jay Parks, Yen-Chia Chen, Eric Hom, and Jennifer Rosser formed a steering committee for IU-SOC and prepared to launch legal service under the supervision of Professor Fran Quigley – IU-SOC was then launched in the spring of 2011. By providing free legal service to the underserved of Indiana, IU-SOC Legal Services hopes to build up and develop a strong and long lasting connection with local Hoosiers. Through this pro bono opportunity, IU-SOC Legal Services will also help law students gain more hands-on experience of the law in the real world. For information about participating in IU-SOC Legal Services, please contact: iulawsoc@iupui.edu.

Faculty, Students & Staff in the Spotlight !

Professor Shawn Boyne's paper, "The Many Faces of Objectivity: A Look at German Sexual Assault Cases," was one of six papers selected by The American Society of Comparative Law to be discussed at the 6th Annual Comparative Law Workshop at Yale School of Law held Feb. 11–12. Professor Boyne uses an interdisciplinary lens to investigate the links between law, politics, and culture. Her current paper is based on a period of extensive ethnographic research in Germany in which Professor Boyne interviewed over 100 German prosecutors and visited 15 different prosecution offices.

Professor Karen Bravo discussed her research on human trafficking and the trans-Atlantic slave trade at the University at Buffalo Law School on March 10th. The lecture was hosted by the University's Institute of Research and Education on Women and Gender's Feminist Research Alliance and co-sponsored by The Baldy Center for Law and Social Policy. The lecture, "The Role of the Trans-Atlantic Slave Trade in Contemporary Anti-Human Trafficking Discourse," discussed the superficial and exploitative references to and uses of the trans-Atlantic slave trade and slavery in contemporary anti-human trafficking discussions. ## Bike Theft Prevention Tips

The increasing popularity of biking as a sport and as a means of transportation has made bicycles an easy target for thieves. Theft prevention tips include:

1. Lock your bike to a bike rack ONLY and avoid locking items that can be easily cut, broken, or removed. (Bike racks are located in the law school underground garage for extra security.)
2. Locking your bike on rails, trees, signs, etc., can be a hazard to campus safety, campus property, and your personal property. Bikes found to be a hazard will be removed by campus officials.
3. Bikes not locked to anything may be removed by thieves. Buy a good lock and use it. Cable bike locks that secure both frame and front and rear wheels to a bike rack are best.

NOTE: For personal safety, always wear a helmet!
